ALEX BOURBIGOT ADIDAS 1-PAGER · PRODUCT MANAGEMENT

I'M BACK.

Last year, I applied for an adidas internship. I made it past the first round, but no further. I took that as a sign I still had more to learn. So I spent the year living sport day to day: training, racing and running alongside people of every level.

#2 APPLICATION

02 WHAT CHANGED

ONE YEAR. NEW SPLITS.

On paper: management, export sales and sport retail.

BEYOND THE CV ↓

JAN 2026

280+

DAYS IN A ROW

At least 5 km every day: rain, heat, road, trail. Small frictions show up fast.

APR 2026

2:38

PARIS MARATHON

From 2:59 to 2:38:21 in one year.

SEP 2026

2,020

BACK TO RUN

2,020 runners signed up, with very different levels and reasons to run.

MAR 2027

NEXT

HERZOGENAURACH

Six months. Ready to move.

03 YOU GOT THIS

REMEMBER IT'S A GAME.

5 km every day sounds like pressure, and Back to Run's rules were demanding. So I wrapped them in a playful world: a beaver mascot, a "Tribunal" to plead a missed day, runners pushing each other to come back. Running daily myself, I saw kit play a similar role: the right product makes movement more inviting, the wrong one adds friction.

WHAT I'D BRING TO PRODUCT MANAGEMENT

01 THE ATHLETE'S VIEW

About 12 years of football, then running, up to a 2:38:21 marathon. I know what a committed amateur expects from kit, session after session.

02 THE STORE-FLOOR VIEW

At Nike and Decathlon, I advised customers and heard the questions and doubts that come just before a purchase.

03 NOT EVERY RUNNER IS THE SAME

Through Back to Run and my community, I've seen people start from very different places. A beginner doesn't need what a seasoned racer needs, and a range should reflect that.
